Olga often said, "Spending quality time was a gift from above," and she lived those words every day of her life. She made time for her loving family -no matter how busy life became—for the people she loved the most. Her world revolved around the deep love she shared with her husband and children. Her presence was a constant source of comfort and strength—always available for a gentle embrace, a listening ear, or words of wisdom tailored perfectly to the moment.

To be near Olga was to feel love in its purest form. Her kindness radiated from within, enveloping everyone she met with a warmth. She had a rare gift of making others feel truly seen, valued, and cared for. Her home and her heart were open to all, and many will remember her as a safe place in times of both joy and sorrow.

Respect was something Olga gave freely and genuinely—and it was always returned. She treated everyone with compassion and dignity, and in doing so, inspired others to do the same.
